Start With a Bang

The first 30 seconds of your presentation are crucial. Instead of launching into your topic, hook your audience with a question, a surprising fact, or even a short story. This grabs attention and makes people want to listen more.

Think of it like opening a video game—you need an exciting intro to make players want to keep playing.

Know Your Stuff Inside Out

Confidence comes from preparation. The more you practise and understand your topic, the more natural and interesting you'll sound. People can tell when you really know what you're talking about, and they trust speakers who are genuinely expert.

Use Visuals That Help, Not Distract

Slides, images, and videos are powerful tools, but they should support your words, not replace them. Avoid walls of text. Instead, use bold images and simple key points that back up what you're saying. Let your visuals breathe—don't cram everything onto one slide.

Think of it like seasoning food—a little makes it better, but too much ruins it.

Connect With Your Audience

Make eye contact and speak directly to your listeners, not to your slides. Vary your tone of voice—sometimes quiet, sometimes energetic. This keeps people from zoning out. You can also ask rhetorical questions or invite the audience to think about something for a moment.

Tell Stories, Not Just Facts

People remember stories better than lists of information. If you can, share an example, an anecdote, or a real-life scenario that brings your topic to life. Stories create emotion, and emotion creates memory.

Move Around and Use Gestures

Standing still behind a desk is boring. Move purposefully around the space, use hand gestures naturally, and show your enthusiasm. Your body language tells the audience whether you care about your topic—and if you do, they will too.

Think of it like a footballer celebrating a goal—their energy makes you excited, not a motionless statue.

End With a Strong Finish

Don't just stop talking and sit down. Recap your main message, end with a powerful statement or call to action, and always invite questions. A great ending is what people remember most.
